Federal and Postal job scams: Some tip-offs to rip-offs

You don't have to pay for information about job vacancies with the U.S. Government or U.S. Postal Service. But scam artists are victimizing many Americans by selling information about federal job opportunities. These scam artists advertise in the classified sections of newspapers and offer to help you find and apply for federal jobs. Some fraudulent companies even try to contact you by using names like the "U.S. Agency for Career Employment Services," which sounds like a federal agency.

Scam artists may also claim that the availability of federal job openings in your area. For example, the Postal Service has few vacancies for career positions. For many of the entry jobs you must take a written examination first. Test 470 Postal Service living takes place through 85 districts offices at the local level.

If a private party tells you that postal jobs are available, check with the Postal Service to determine if hiring is taking place and if the exam is required for eligibility. Because of the high volume of applications taking the test, it is only offered every few years in a given district.

Information about U.S. government jobs is available free. Federal agencies and the U.S. Postal Service never charge application fees, or guarantee that an applicant will be hired.

If positions require a competency examination - and many do - hiring agencies typically offer free sample questions to consumers who sign up for the exam. It is deceptive for anyone to guarantee you a high score on an unmarketable message in this state's country, there is no such thing as a guaranteed job.

However, University of Kentucky basketball coach Tommy Amundson has a message for fans: "I'm not a sports artist. I'm a coach."

Amundson's message is a reminder that while the Kentucky Wildcats are a national title contender, it's not the only thing that matters. The coach's focus is on the team's performance and the fans' support.
