Pet Care

Recently, the American Kennel Club issued quite a fip. They came out with a list of dogs they deemed "dangerous" for families with children. Automatically, such gentle breeds as Beagles and Retrievers were on the list, as well as Dalmatians (who are very high-spirited, but not aggressive). Because of the public's reaction, the AKC had to retract the list. As owners of these breeds, we also scoffed at the report. Obviously, we thought, someone was asleep at the switch over at the AKC. The truth about dogs are based on that they will behave according to how they're treated. If a dog is not socialized, in other words, it's not taught to play with people, it's not socialized, it will most certainly become vicious. If dogs are loved and treated well, they respond in kind - including pit bulls, who get a very bad rap.

Warn your children of potential abusers

To protect your children from sexual abuse, you should teach them to be aware of the "dirty old man" and "stranger on the street." While this is a good idea and all children should be taught the dangers of the unknown, in most instances of sexual abuse the abuser is someone the child knows and trusts.
