Internet holiday shoppers should check this list--twice

Internet shopping already exceeds $62 billion annually and is destined to reach new highs as about 98 million Americans who shop on-line approach the holidays, according to UK cooperative extension agent Robert Flashman.

Flashman, whose job in the University of Kentucky College of Human Environmental Sciences includes advising Kentuckians about ways education and information can improve their lives, said today there are virtually no products a person cannot find on the Internet.

"Internet shopping does require a serious investment of time," he said, "and there are several things a person should do before they start shopping and while they are shopping. Additionally, Flashman advises consumers to consider using the information they acquire while surfing for the latest Pokemon videos and the Barbie of the 90's to comparison shop and bargain with local merchants.

"In many instances, local merchants will beat or at least match a price a buyer finds on a Web site if the customer will only ask," Flashman said.

But whether you are purchasing or buying outright on the Internet, Flashman advises consumers to:

--Get organized. Look up desired items in such places as Consumer Reports or a site such as www.bargains.org, a service center for the study of services and the model numbers. There are Web addresses search engines designed specif
