Get Quick And Easy Help For PC Woes—Before They Start

(NAPS)—It's an experience that many consumers have had. Your PC locks up and nothing seems to bring it back. Imagine if you never had to call a technician, or if your computer automatically fixed the problem before an error message appeared! Think of the time you could save and the hassles you could avoid.

The average PC user spends approximately four to seven days resolving a PC issue, according to an October 1998 Windows Magazine technical support survey. Now, one PC manufacturer offers Web-based, easy-to-use programs that virtually eliminate the need to call a service technician.

"PCs are now a part of some people's lives as their automobile. Just like a car, PCs need regular maintenance," said Mike Zimmerman, director, Customer Service and Support, Consumer Products Group, Compaq Computer Corporation. "Our programs help consumers keep their PCs in top condition with continual hassle-free maintenance. If consumers ever do need technical assistance, we have the tools to get them back online quickly and easily."

Compaq has created three easy solutions to save customers time:

- preventative updates,
- remote technical assistance,
- personalized online help.

Free Software Updates

The Compaq Service Connection sends free automated software updates over the Web to keep PCs tuned for peak performance. For example, a consumer will see "CD-ROM Driver Update: This download will improve the performance of your CD-ROM. Please press the Install button now." With a "click" of the mouse, the consumer may install, postpone or delete the update. Each software update is specific to the consumer's PC model and can be downloaded in the background over multiple sessions.

Customer support has been overwhelmingly positive, with more than 1.5 million Presario owners worldwide downloading software updates since the service was launched.

Real-Time Fixes

Using Compaq Carbon Copy, a remote diagnostic software, technicians can diagnose PC problems, download software updates and adjust PC settings—all while consumers remain in the comfort of home. The consumer calls the support center and gives permission to a technician to remotely access the PC. During the call, the technician "looks" inside the PC and simultaneously explains step-by-step the diagnosis and repair taking place. Compaq is one of the few computer manufacturers to provide this service.

Approximately 97 percent of Presario PC issues have been resolved on the first call using this service.

Personal Assistance

Online Forum 24-hour service allows consumers to contact Compaq anytime—day or night—without waiting on the phone. Consumers can share information about their Presario PCs through online chat sessions or email an online technician. Customers also can email questions or comments to the online bulletin boards, to which support technicians will respond within two business days. To participate in a discussion, or to post a question at the online forum go to http://forum.compaq.com.

To learn about new service and support technologies, or to find out if your Presario PC has Compaq Service Connection, Carbon Copy or Online Forum, visit http://www.compaq.com/athome.
