Volunteering Is Up Nationwide

(NAPS)—The good news is that 109 million people volunteered in 1998, almost 56 percent of the adult population. They gave an estimated 19.9 billion hours in both formal and informal* volunteering. These hours represent the equivalent of 9.3 million full-time employees.

Volunteering is up especially for people of color. Forty-seven percent of African-Americans and 46 percent of Hispanics volunteered. Also, a higher percentage of women (62 percent) than of men (49 percent) volunteered. Men who volunteered gave slightly more time than women: 3.6 hours per week as opposed to 3.4 hours for women.

Volunteers are the backbone of the independent sector. Volunteers are more likely than nonvolunteers to give to the sector. Contributing households with a volunteer gave more than two and a half times more on average than those without a volunteer
