was established in 1997 in Lexington, plans to start up a steel panelization process company in the building formerly housing the Jockey International Sewing plant. The company plans to employ 60-75 people within one year and possibly expanding to 150-175 employees within three years. Of these employees:

"This is a great step in bringing more industry into our area. Jockey hasn't been gone that long, but we are working hard to bring those jobs, plus more, back to Nicholas County," said Larry Tincher, Nicholas County Judge/Executive.

Nicholas County and Carlisle has received over 3 million dollars from the CDBG funds since 1992. The City of Carlisle received funds for the Municipal Gas System and Restoration, Wastewater System Improvements, Water Distribution System and most recently for Carlisle Housing. Nicholas County has received funding for the Phase Four Water Extension Project and a go partner with Bath County for Rural Water Extensions.
