Cooking for July 4th? Here are some tips for safe eating

Most everyone knows to be careful with fireworks during the July 4th weekend. But the Kentucky Cabinet for Health Services wants to provide some tips on another important holiday tradition: eating food.

During the summer months and especially during the July 4th weekend, a great number of people will be cooking out and handling foods for meals.

The cabinet's Food Safety Branch wants to remind Kentucky cooks of some general food safety tips in hopes of ensuring safe, healthy meals.

"Be sure to keep your hands clean, don't cross contaminate hands or surfaces, cook foods thoroughly, keep food contact surfaces clean," said Guy Deane of the Food Safety Branch in the Department for Public Health. "Wash all produce thoroughly, don't let foods stay at room temperature and refrigerate foods promptly after the meal."

Here are some specific Wash Hands: Be sure to keep your hands clean, don't cross-contaminate. Wash before eating, before preparing food, after using the restroom, between raw and ready to eat products, after handling pets, and anytime your hands are soiled. Wash with hot soapy water and dry hands with paper towels.

Clean and Sanitize Surfaces: Sanitize by using a solution of regular household bleach and warm water. Mix approximately 1 Tbsp. of bleach per 2 gallons of water.

Separate-Don't Contaminate: Separate raw food from ready to eat foods. Use different cutting boards or wash, rinse and sanitize after contact with raw meat, poultry and seafood. Never use the same plate to transport the cooked hamburgers that was used for the raw patties. Handle sliced melon carefully: Handle all cut melons, including cantaloupe and watermelon carefully. Wash hands well before cutting melons. Thoroughly clean the outer surface of the melon to remove surface dirt prior to cutting. Keep work surfaces and utensils used for cutting melon, clean and sanitized. Avoid handling the cut melon with bare hands; using gloves, deli tissue or appropriate utensils whenever possible.

Refrigerate sliced melon promptly at 41 F. or below. Whole, uncut melon does not require refrigeration. Remember, wash all raw fruits and vegetables thoroughly prior to eating.

Chill- Refrigerate leftovers promptly. Within 2 hours (leftovers) 41 degrees F. or below. 1 degree F. or below.
