Tired Of Being Tired?

by George D. Birkmayer, MD., Ph.D., world-renowned medical researcher, medical doctor, professor at the University of Grazie, Austria and Secretary General of New York's International Academy of Tumor Marker Oncology (NAPS)—Chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS) affects an estimated 14 million Americans.

Birkmayer, M.D.

Symptoms can include fatigue, poor concentration and memory, muscle pain, swollen or tender lymph nodes and sleep disorders.

While scientists are not sure of the cause, one widely-held theory is that people with CFS have lower levels of a cellular chemical called ATP. A coenzyme, nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide (NADH), commonly referred to as coenzyme 1, is known to help the body generate ATP and thereby increase cellular energy.

In a recent FDA-approved study, published in the medical journal Annals of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology in February, 1999, medical researchers discovered giving ten milligram tablets a day of ENADA®, the only available patented, stabilized, orally-absorbable form of NADH, led to a four-fold decrease in symptoms and improvement in their quality of life.

Pointers For Parents

Protecting Children From Drugs

(NAPS)—A recent survey found that the percent of 12-to-17-year-olds who know someone using such drugs as heroin, cocaine or LSD increased by 39 percent to 56 percent in recent year's.

Many parents are fighting back with information they found in a book entitled What is Scientology? based on the works of international bestselling author L. Ron Hubbard.

Besides educating parents about the trouble signs to look for in teens who may be on drugs, the book also provides tools that can help prevent them from getting on drugs in the first place by helping them to believe in themselves and develop a sense of happiness and well-being.

The book, from Bridge Publications, is available at local bookstores.
