

TOBACCO FROM FRONT

Commission and to seek support and leadership in implementation of them. "We are pleased with today's events and our visits with our leaders," said Rod Kuegel, president of the Burley Tobacco Growers Cooperative. "Our delegation has heard the concerns of their constituents and we are hopeful that they will address the needs of the growers. TERP will return to quota holders the investments in quota that they have made over the past 60 years thus eliminating quota as currently known. It would put quota into the hands of the active growers by creating production permits that would be tied to the grower not the land. "We need your help to get back up..."

"The report is the best and possibly the last real opportunity to help our tobacco growers while improving the health of our rural communities," said Kuegel. The Presidents Tobacco Commission report suggests a mandatory buyout of tobacco quota called the Tobacco Equity Reduction Program (TERP). TERP would return to quota holders the investments in quota that they have made over the past 60 years thus eliminating quota as currently known. It would put quota into the hands of the active growers by creating production permits that would be tied to the grower not the land. "We need your help to get back up..."
