FI TARETH LEWIS.

Today's products are too convenient

I'm not sure whether consumers are getting extremely lazy, or if the people who are responsible for designing new products just THINK we are — but the production of way-too-convenient products has to stan.

Case in point #1: I am an admitted lip balm junkie, and I have had the worst luck with all the "ingenious" new improvements these arked "with new extra

Case in point # 3: What i p with pre-sliced cookie ough? I can understand uving ready-made cookie buying ready-made cookie dough. Most people (myself included) don't bake very nuch nowadays, and there is no sense in storing all the ingredients for cookies for the rare occasion you might supposed to have a sense of satisfaction when the food is done, because you put effort See PRODUCTS on 6

Commentary

Don't expect me to bargain

I did not refuse the first offer I got for my old riding mower.

It sat in the yard for two days with sale signs on it, and the control of the Hollor I say. Not being, a great haggler or swapper, I mendiately look hauled it away. Not being, a great haggler or swapper, I mendiately have been succeeded by the day before I sold the old mower I worked be price I had posted.

Actually, the day before I sold the old mower I worked be the specific the day before I sold the old mower I worked be price I had posted.

Actually, the day before I sold the he mount to harpe up the buttery.

The mower was probably worth more as spare parts run and the mover was probably worth more as spare parts run and the specific I had posted.

But, I added, the original belance in the part work was the state of the part with the specific post of post of the part with a "For Sale" and the price I had been used for a bush-hog, ATV, and toy, that the explained by confessing that the part was part and the specific post of the part was a strength of the
