New holiday rules

Why is it that I can go into any store and buy Christmas decorations in October?

October?
Doesn't that seem a little odd to you?
And now that everyone decorates for every holiday, we can now buy decorations for three holidays at the same time... Halloween, Thanksgiving AND Christmas.

Thanksgiving AND Christmas.
You walk through a store and in one aisle is Halloween stuff mixed with Halloween stuff mixed with a little Thanksgiving and then you're smack-dab into Christmas in the next. It feels like you're going through some sort of weird, retail time warp. I'm so confused about the whole thing.

I shouldn't have to be hinking about Christmas. It's two months away!

If we do have any trick-treaters on Halloween, I'm

Remembering the draft

All the recent panic about the possibility of a revived military draft reminds me a little bit of the 1960s, when other.

I probably should have. The old draft boards, before the lottery system came about, seem to have set themselves up as community arbitrators, deciding who would go and who wouldn't, and rowdy young men from less prominent families were high on list of draftees.

Head of the Holler

Because of college deferments, the system effectively penalized between the control of the college where the college where reverse relies applied; if you had money you couldn't go there. My family definitely didn't buy me out of the militager.
