State police announce use of camaros for enforcement

New Kentucky State Police Enforcement Vehicles (SEV) are now patrolling the highways of the Commonwealth.

RSP has acquired, through a federal grant, four 2001 Camaros to be used for speed enforcement on Kentucky's interstates and parkways.

These vehicles were acquired to fill a special niche in the vehicle inventory, according to Lt. Kevin Payne, police public affairs.

While the typical marked Kentucky State Police patrol cruiser offers a legitimate visual deterrent to traffic violators, these vehicles will be minimally marked, he said.

SEV's do not have any distinguishing markings on the front and rear of the vehicle, but do have the standard KSP emblem on the door and "State Trooper" on the front fender.

It is hoped that the presence of low-visibility traffic enforcement will encourage safer driving," Payne said.

Statistics indicate that a contributing factor in 25 percent of accidents in Kentucky.

These police-package vehicles, which have the same cubic inch high output engine of the Corvette, have been sent to the Bowling Green, Elizabethtown, Dry Ridge and London posts and are now in service.

Stationing the SEV's at these posts allows for the best coverage of Kentucky's limited access highways.

Each of the cars is assigned a primary and secondary driver, both of whom have received specialized driver's training. This training entailed low and high speed driving with high performance vehicle operation.

These troopers, through their training and past performance, are the best vehicle operators in the Kentucky State Police, Payne said.

Their operation is limited to interstates and parkways and can be used only on secondary roads for specific enforcement purposes, such as combating excessive speeding or locations with high accident potential.

The cubit was a standard measure of length among the Hebrews. It was the distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger of a grown man. The standard cubit was about 17.5 inches, the royal cubit about 20.5 inches.

Signostomy and colonoscopy

Q. What is the difference between a signostomy and a colonoscopy? W. Who should have these tests? A. Signostomy and colonoscopy are ways to look at the inside of the colon and rectum. In both tests, the doctor uses a thin, flexible tube with a light to check for polyps (small sacs on the lining of the colon that may become cancer), tumors, or abnormal areas of the lining of the colon. A signostomy examines the lower colon only. A colonoscopy examines the entire colon. Doctors use these tests to check for cancer of the colon and rectum.

How well these tests can find cancer has not been studied thoroughly. Signostomy is part of a current large clinical trial research study with people, called the "Proctitis, Leukemia, Colorectal and Ovarian Cancer Screening Trial" (PLOCOT), sponsored by the National Cancer Institute. The study will look at whether signostomy and other tests decrease cancer deaths.

Other ways to check for cancer of the colon and rectum include the fecal occult blood test (stool sample) and a barium enema (a white, chalky solution that outlines the colon and rectum during x-rays). The doctor also may check for these
