It seems like corporate sponsorship is everywhere. It's like some Evil Empire that has infiltrated every aspect of our lives.

Luke Skywalker said it best. "It's not that I like the Empire, I hate it - there's just nothing I can do about it."

Everywhere you look, someone is sporting some company's logo or saying how their product helped them break through for the win.

Even when they talk about the people who really do the work they are referred to as "Brand X's" team.

But I do have to give respect to NASCAR drivers. No other human beings on the planet can get two corporate plugs into one sense than they can.

"Well Steve, we ran a good race, it was close to the wire and I was shaking in my pants. I was called over to my guide Detergent crew chief on my (Gatorade) radio, and he told me to kick it into the spin cycle like in a Haybag washer and bring me back so we could crack open a cold Swiffer Light in the winner's circle here at the Darlingsburg 750."

Even individual plays have sponsors. "Fans, that fumble recovery was brought to you by Finders Keepers Auto Auctions."

"Fans, that fumble recovery was brought to you by Finders Keepers Auto Auctions."

"I'll be the next step to infiltrate regular TV programs. They already do, but I can see the day, go with me on this, when sitcom jokes are sponsored."

"Imagine if you will from a classic sitcom. Willis 'Arnold, we have to help Kimberly sneak out for the big dance!'"

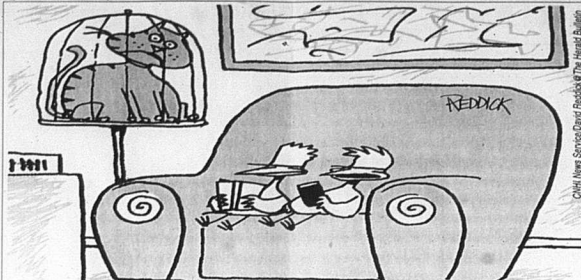

"Arnold: 'What 'chuck talkin' 'bout Willis?'"

"Announcer: 'That classic sitcom catch phrase was brought to you by Snuggly - your choice for a better tomorrow!'"

"Won't that be fun? It's even hard to find clothes that don't have an obvious corporate logo. Forget trying to find any athletic gear without some neon logo somewhere on it. It's even hard to find a place that doesn't have some sponsors names plastered all over it."

"No even venues are not safe from the Empire. It used to be that stadiums were named after PEOPLE. Now most are named after things."

"Things are so much quieter around here when the humans go on vacation."

Debate about stem cell research rages on

One of the big things in the news recently is the stem cell debate.

Personally, I have trouble understanding why there would be a debate on a medical practice that could prove exceptionally useful, but I can see why some may be opposed to it.

Stem cells originate from a fertilized human egg, which develops into eight cells forming a small hollow ball. Inside that ball are stem cells, which are cells that can develop into virtually any part of the body. After the cells are retrieved, though, the ball has no chance of actually becoming a fetus.

One of the biggest objections to using stem cells from embryos is the belief that destroying a three or four day old embryo is tantamount to recreating skin, and may be used in the creation of new medicines.

Since I recently lost my grandfather to Alzheimer's, I am disappointed that something that could have been done to treat his condition was so tied up in moral debate that he passed away before my family would ever have known if stem cells would have helped him.

Second, there is the debate on when life begins. Some don't feel that an embryo should be considered a baby until it develops enough to live outside the womb. Others feel that life begins at conception. My personal opinion is that eight cells does not a baby make.

I anticipate the use of stem cells from adults, but there are problems in using these.

They are hard to obtain. They cannot reliably transform into other types of cells. The recipient of an adult stem cell transplant will need to take powerful anti-rejection drugs, most likely for the rest of their life.

Aside from the age-old debate of whether an embryo has human rights, society must consider which is more important - eight cells, or an already viable adult life?

The stem cell debate is one I don't see ending anytime soon. The federal government is responsible for making this decision, since much of medical research is funded by federal money.

I anticipate the outcome and wonder how it may affect society.

Such allegations not only violate the Code of Ethics for Pharmacists, but also state pharmacy practice acts, and the profession's fundamental responsibility - ensuring that patients receive the correct medication and understand how to make the best use of that medication.

Beyond the allegations of illegality, the actions with which this pharmacist is charged violate several of the elements of the Code of Ethics for Pharmacists, which states that "a pharmacist places concerns for the well-being of the patient at the center of professional practice."

The Code continues, "Considering the patient-pharmacist relationship as a covenant means that a pharmacist has moral obligations in response to the gift of trust received from a patient. In return for this gift a pharmacist promises to help individuals achieve optimum benefit from their medications, to be committed to their welfare, and to maintain their trust."

KPhA and KSHIP are committed to assuring that the citizens of Kentucky receive the best care possible from pharmacists. Both associations strongly believe that this is an isolated incident and the public deserves to be able to trust their pharmacist as the health professional who can promote the good of every patient in a caring and compassionate manner. If patients have any questions or concerns, they should speak to their pharmacist.

Donnie Riley, R.Ph. President Kentucky Pharmacists Association

Mary Lea Harper, Pharm.D. President Kentucky Society of Health-System Pharmacists

Pharmacist diluting medicine an isolated incident

In response to the news story of a pharmacist in Kansas City accused of intentionally diluting cancer drugs, the Kentucky Pharmacists Association (KPhA) and Kentucky Society of Health-System Pharmacists (KSHIP), the Commonwealth's professional societies of pharmacists, believe that it is responsible for any health professional to endanger the health of patients for personal gain.

These allegations, if true, represent the offensive behavior of a single pharmacist, an isolated incident, which is contrary to the ethical standards of the profession. KPhA and KSHIP and their members condemn such behavior as a breach of the public trust held by pharmacists.
