READING FROM FRONT

Louise Curran took time to read to the students in Mrs. Lane and Curran's class during morning.

The student volunteers were given their choice of books to read to the first graders and one night to practice. Kiskaden and Davis said they were a little nervous because they had never read to another class before and Crisp said that wasn't nervous. "I wanted to come down and read for them," Kiskaden said. All of the students thought it would be fun to read to their younger counterparts because they thought it would be fun. "I love to read," Davis said. Last year, NEA estimates that almost 35 million children and adults celebrated Dr. Seuss and the joy of reading last March, and according to the National Education Association web site, without reading, we couldn't. Use the Internet. Get a driver's license. Understand a food/marine label. Fill out an order form. Vote. Follow a map. Learn the words to a new song. Try out a new recipe. Look up phone numbers. Order take-out. Do the crossword puzzle. Laugh at our favorite comic strip. Help our kids with their homework. Enjoy Harry Potter. Read to a child. Country singer Garth Brooks was invited to chair the national event.

Savinio and ReRun graduates, Our Mims, El Bakan, Knoon Ronger and Region. The horses will produce watercolor art using a non-toxic paint in vibrant colors on special watercolor paper. Prototype pieces have been produced by Our Mims and other ReRun horses painting with lips, tails and hooves. Once completed, the artwork will be photographed and placed on the Mane Event website www.themaneevent.com. The unidentified framed originals will be placed on display in Lexington, Kentucky during the weeks leading up to the Mane Event. Art aficionados will be allowed to vote for their favorite pieces, as will anyone in attendance at the Mane Event. Prior to the live auction - the identities of the artists will be revealed, as will the sale tally. "We understand that, due in part to MILRS, many facets of the Thoroughbred industry may be in a tough spot financially this year," explained Sham Wylie, ReRun co-founder and president. "We also feel strongly that adoption and retirement groups need to maintain efforts to help themselves financially in an effort to make available funding on as far as possible. To that end, we did a little creative thinking on this latest project. We hope that it will bring good PR to the industry as a whole, and show that as an industry, we do know how to lighten up and have fun." This year's live auction is being conducted by Daniel D. Stewart, III, and his staff of professional auctioneers from The Stewart Group, a Lexington based auction and real estate firm which regularly supplies professional services to America's horse industry on a regional, national and international basis. For the second year, the firm and its associates have volunteered their professional services to ReRun. As auctioneer and fellow member of the Thoroughbred Retirement Center, the mission of ReRun is vital to maintaining a healthy horse industry here and elsewhere. "We were very excited to work with the ReRun team, a group of individuals who are dedicated to these magnificent animals," according to Daniel Stewart. ReRun is seeking other farms that wish to participate in the creation of this art. For more information, contact ReRun via e-mail at rerunhorse@kfl.net or call 608.288.7786.

DRIVERS FROM FRONT

another vehicle or solid object. Keep in front of or behind high cystered vehicles likely to swerve in a wind gust. Those vehicles include sport utilities, vans, school tractor trailer trucks. Do not linger along side while passing. Likewise, give such vehicles extra room when they are passing you. Reduce speed and increase following distance in construction zones. Barrels and temporary signs may blow into the roadway. Be aware that windy conditions are often more severe in mountainous areas where "wind tunnels" are created by the unusual topography. Also, when driving through an underpass, wind speed will decrease under the bridge, but increase suddenly when you come out the other side. Hold the steering wheel firmly to prepare for the sudden burst of wind. Be aware that when exiting a parked vehicle, a gust of wind may cause a door to fly open or shut with great force, causing injury. Assist small children and teenagers adults getting into or out of the car.
