Heaven Is A Lot Like Kentucky

A CERTAIN SUMMER DAY IN CYNTHIANA June 12, 1864, Cynthiana.

Heaven Is A Lot Like Kentucky

By Charles Mattox

As cannon fire whistled overhead and bullets ricocheted around him, 29-year-old Captain George Will Jackson crouched lower behind the rock wall near Kellar's bridge at Cynthiana.

His sword had been lost in the fierce hand-to-hand fighting as he and his boys in Bravo Company, 2nd Kentucky Battalion of Mounted Rifles, Confederate States of America, fought their way across the Licking River to their besieged companions among General John Hunt Morgan's Confederate Calvary.

For two days Gen. Morgan's forces had pounded away at the Union forces in Cynthiana, and smoke from the fires set by his men, together with musket and cannon fire, caused the entire town and surrounding region to be encased in a smoky haze that mingled with the dense fog along the river.

Capt. Jackson, who was born and raised in the small western Fleming County community of Elizaville, had led the boys in Company B through four years of war. Together they participated in such military engagements as Chickamauga, Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Lookout Mountain and McMinnville.

He and his men had also participated in several small Kentucky raids and battles, including the local Battles of Elizaville, Plummer's Landing in Fleming County and the Battle of Triplett Creek Bridge in Rowan County.

The men in Company B all had family ties in Fleming and Nicholas County.

Never were the battles as fierce throughout the American Civil War as when Kentuckians faced one another.

Such had regrettably also been the case in Cynthiana.

Morgan won a resounding victory two summers earlier in Cynthiana on July 18, 1862. He thought that he would repeat that victory.

He thought wrong.

About 750 Union men of the 171st Ohio National Guard under the command of Brig. Gen. Edward Hobson arrived by train about a mile north of the Cynthiana at Kellar's Bridge on June 11. Another 300 Union men of the 168th Ohio Infantry Volunteers joined them. The Union-supported Harrison County Home Guards fought fiercely together with their Buckeye companions against the Confederate forces as 37 buildings in downtown Cynthiana were consumed by fire. Although Morgan had achieved an overwhelming victory on the first day of the second Battle of Cynthiana, the second day would turn into a Confederate rout.

Union Brig. Gen. Stephen Gano Burbridge with 2,400 men, a combined Union force of Ohio, Kentucky, and Michigan mounted infantry and cavalry, attacked Morgan's forces at dawn on the second day of battle.

The Confederate line could not hold and Jackson led his company across the river to aid a floundering company, but then had his horse shot from beneath him as the Confederates retreated.

Jackson was stranded and heroically covered the retreat of his comrades until he had expended all of his ammunition and his pistol was empty. As Union soldiers of the 9th Michigan Regiment closed around him, he removed his spurs and tossed them and his pistol into the Licking River, determined that no boys in blue would have any souvenirs at his expense.

Gen. Morgan led the remainder of his forces in a desperate retreat through Nicholas and Fleming County. The exhausted and battered Confederate force finally stopped in Flemingsburg and slept on the streets and sidewalks with the reigns of their horses wrapped around their arms so they could remount in an instant.

Jackson was made a Union prisoner and soon found himself on a northbound prison train.

He was imprisoned on Johnson's Island in extreme northern Ohio, in Sandusky Bay, along the shores of Lake Erie.

The prison was unique in that it housed only Confederate officers.

Jackson participated in three escape attempts, but was captured each time. On his final escape attempt he managed to make it off the island and crossed the frozen ice of Sandusky Bay to the inland of Ohio before being captured.

He was one of the last prisoners to leave the camp at the conclusion of the American Civil War, as he flatly refused to take the oath of allegiance to the Union.

By refusing to take the oath, or "swallowing the dog" as the Confederates called it, he was refused railway transportation south, and had to walk back to his home in Elizaville. He finally reached his home after nearly perishing from starvation late in 1865.

He eventually found employment, first as a traveling salesman and later as an officer of the law and the proprietor of a saddle and harness shop.

He married Louvenia Teager of Lewis County and they raised seven children at their Elizaville home.

George Will Jackson died in 1909 and is buried in the Elizaville Cemetery.

He reportedly enjoyed going to Cynthiana in his later years and walking along the banks of the Licking River while reflecting on a certain summer day there in his earlier life.

possible future lease of a large truck from World-Wide Equipment Inc., with Magistrate Jeff Randolph leading the discussion.

According to Randolph, a truck could be ready for lease in three weeks with the company guaranteeing to purchase the truck back from the county at least 91 percent or better of the purchase price at the end of the first year.

Dozens of counties are participating in the special program and Nicholas County magistrates are considering following suit with Judge Tincher also expressing support for the program.

The truck being considered has a load capacity three times greater than any of the other trucks used by the county, and will remain under the company's full warranty while the county uses it.

Magistrate Steve Hamilton observed that the newest truck the county currently has in its fleet will be paid off this September.

In other business the court on June 12:

Heard from Nicholas County Sheriff Dick Garrett, who presented the annual tax collections report. Garrett reported that he and his office staff have collected $1,407,004 in taxes. "And I've got the best bookkeeper in the state of Kentucky," Garrett said while praising the accuracy and attention to detail of his secretary and bookkeeper, Linda House. Garrett also noted that the vast majority of delinquent taxes from various county properties had been sold to an out of state collection agency. Garrett's report was unanimously approved on a motion by magistrate Steve Hamilton and seconded by magistrate Jeff Randolph.

Approved permission for the Rotary Club to use the courthouse for Saturday in Carlisle, Sept. 29.

Approved contracts with Montgomery and Bourbon County jails to house Nicholas County prisoners.

Approved the treasurer's transfers.

Approved payment of the county's monthly bills.

Authorized the judge to sign necessary documents to apply for a low-interest Kentucky Association of Counties loan.

to clean up blighted areas.

"We send a letter asking the property owner to clean up the property," Clark said. "If they don't respond or take action after so long we send a city crew to the property and they clean it up, and then we send the property owner a bill. If they do not pay the bill in a certain amount of time, we put a lien on the property."

"We'll if people don't take pride in their own property, I guess we'll have to help them," said Magistrate Daryl Stacy.

Court members agreed they wanted to create a better appearance across the county and noted that some property in the county was full of appliances, abandoned vehicles and other items some categorized as junk.

"One man's junk is another man's treasure," observed sheriff Dick Garrett during the discussion.

"Yeah," Stacy said. "There are places in the county that I don't think look very good, but the property is owned by good, taxpaying citizens who never get into any trouble and pay their bills on time. What's junk to me might not be junk to someone else."

"We'll have to find a happy median," said County Attorney Dawn Letcher.

Judge Tincher stressed that he wanted no unsightly lagoons visible from county or state roads and right-of-ways. He led discussion on adopting a future ordinance detailing the size of property lots citizens in the county could purchase to eliminate small lots that could not properly install acceptable waste discharge systems.

Tincher engaged in lengthy discussion with Magistrates Stacy, Steve Hamilton, Jeff Randolph and Mike Webb, with the majority of the discussion ranging in acreage size for lots between one-and-a-half, and two acres.

Magistrate Avery Thornsburg was absent.

No agreement was reached among members of the court, and discussion dissolved into several simultaneous conversations at once on several occasions.

The discussion was tabled for later consideration, but all indicated they would approve an ordinance that addressed and corrected the lagoon problem. Letcher told court members that she would research existing ordinances and state laws relating to discharge systems, which she said were governed by the state's Cabinet for Human Resources.
