Bluegrass Beacon

The ideas of this 'Uncle Miltie' were no laughing matter

Bluegrass Beacon

By Jim Waters

When young, most of us think we can change the world. And we set out to do that in whatever field we choose. Then somewhere along the line, we lower our expectations after discovering the magnitude of actually changing the entire world.

But one man really did it. The late Milton Friedman, born 96 years ago July 31, really changed his – and our – world.

"There are very few people over the generations who have ideas that are sufficiently original to materially alter [the direction of civilization]," said Alan Greenspan, former Federal Reserve chairman. "Milton is one of those very few people."

Friedman's ideas were so powerful that they helped fully one-third of the world's citizens improve their standard of living.

Economist Gary Becker, who, like Friedman, won the Nobel Prize for economics, said the one person Indians and Chinese "were more indebted to than anybody else for their great improvement in their situation, in my judgment . . . is Milton Friedman."

India and China alone contribute 37 percent to the world's population. As Becker said, hundreds of millions of residents in these two countries previously lived on $1 or $2 a day, but "now are able to live at a much more decent standard of living as a result of the reform of their economic policies toward more free-market policies, less regulation, less government and the like."

Economics used to bore me to tears, until I understood: Ideas – especially economic ones – have tremendous consequences.

Critics of Friedman prefer the philosophy of economist John Maynard Keynes, who vehemently believed that more government created strong economies and best provided for the neediest. Friedman held faith in individual choice, largely free of government involvement.

Friedman's ideas, not those of Keynes, helped the former Soviet Republic of Estonia prosper. Estonia's first prime minister after it declared independence from the Soviets in 1991, said the only economics book he had read was Friedman's "Free to Choose."

While other former Soviet satellites faltered, Estonia flourished. It developed into a magnet for foreign investment by eliminating corporate taxes on profits reinvested in the country and, according to the Wall Street Journal, became one of the freest economies in the world.

The ideas of Lenin and Marx resulted in the enslavement and a life sentence of poverty for millions. But these ideas, thank God, no longer rule the day.

I believe Friedman's focus on less government and more liberty— the same ideas that won Estonia its freedom and prosperity — someday will also prevail in Frankfort and city halls throughout Kentucky.

But those battles remain.

For example, many bureaucrats and their political pals in Frankfort think government knows better than parents how and where to educate children. Fortunately, a growing number of legislators argue eloquently in favor, of letting parents choose the schools best suited for their kids.

During the last decade of his long and fruitful life, Friedman worked tirelessly to promote school choice. Ironically, his boundless optimism on behalf of achieving the re-empowerment of parents through competition in education could end up having a bigger impact than his economic ideas.

Friedman predicted that allowing parents to choose schools would someday "revolutionize schooling" in the United States, and, may I add, this commonwealth.

Western Kentucky University Professor Robert Pulsinelli, who wrote his doctoral dissertation on Friedman's "Permanent Income Hypothesis," remains a big admirer of the affable Friedman because of his winsome demeanor — and his winning arguments.

"He was just a tireless advocate for freedom," Pulsinelli told me. "He really believed that people's best interests were rooted in freedom and liberty. In academia, that's fairly rare."

Of course, it's rare for one man to change the world, too.

campaign against Obama.

There is little hope that the Republicans and McCain will back off and play fair.

They are going to stick with the sleaze that has worked for the Republicans so well in the past, like the despicable false Swift Boat attacks on John Kerry.

Will the American public fall for the slimy tactics again? John McCain must think so. He has been willing to give up his reputation as a man of class and integrity to engage in vicious, dirty politics.

But then again, maybe the dirty campaign tactics won't work. Maybe Americans will ignore the lies and ask themselves the important question: do you feel you are better off than you were before 8 years of the Republicans? Do you want change or do you want four more years of the same under McCain?

Second Question people should ask themselves: Do you want a President who so far has spent the campaign attacking his opponent and spreading lies, or do you want a positive President who is campaigning by talking about the issues and promising change and hope?

If McCain can't tell the truth in his campaign, how do we trust him to tell us the truth if he becomes President? McCain apparently wants to be President at any cost. How sad. America used to admire him so much.

approximately 5,000 Kentuckians in the brigade.

They were ordered to newly 1,000 more.

But even if the war were to end tomorrow he wondered how any of them could ever truly go home again?

The Union band finished with "Dixie" and a roar of laughter went up and the Union lines. Soon the Yankee brass band began playing "The Star Spangled Banner."

Lt. Lot Young listened for a brief moment, wiped a tear from his cheek and then he closed his eyes and went to sleep.

Tomorrow they would fight again.

"Editor's note: the above was extracted from research material including the words of Lt. Lot Young himself, as taken from the book "Reminiscences of a Soldier of the Orphan Brigade."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor,

On behalf of the family of my mother, Eleanor George, I feel compeller to comment the quality care administered by Johnson Mathers Nursing Home.

Admitting my dear mother to a special needs home was difficult for me and her. It isn't a step anyone wants to take, but often there is no other choice. Watching her deteriorate for 30, at times, tumultuous months was emotionally distressing and enduring her eventual passing was a great loss. Though the experience was daunting, it would have been much more severe if not for the wonderful staff employed by Johnson Mathers.

The demands on the staff are vast, requiring them to wear many hats. They must monitor the health residents, manage sometimes volatile molds, and act as liason to resident's families. In doing all this they become true friends to residents and families alike. The warmth, courteousness and devotion of the staff towards my mother's care honored her last years and ultimately helped with my own grieving process.

I worked as an X-Ray technologist for 44 years, so I have experience in the medical field. I've dealt with other loved ones living in other nursing homes. I've seen the affirmed and defenseless handled with a cold detachment. It's the opposite at Johnson Mathers Nursing Home. Here, attentive individuals look after people with great compassion and care.

It's said that the true measure of a community is in how its weakest members are treated. By the standard set at Johnson Mathers Nursing Home, Carlisle stands as a tall as any other community I've known.
