Heaven Is A Lot Like Kentucky

SHREDDING THE COLORS

August 31, 1864, south of Atlanta near Jonesboro, Georgia

The members of the Orphan Brigade were moving again, after their successful defense of then area south of Atlanta, near Utoy Creek.

General Sherman's massive Union Army force was attempting to cut off the Confederate line of retreat and the Orphans had been ordered to a railhead near Jonesboro to keep the Confederate line of retreat for the Army of the Cumberland open.

After the move, the Kentucky First Infantry Brigade, known through history as The Orphan-Brigade, settled in to their new positions.

Lt Lot Young, of Company H, Fourth Battalion, was enjoying lunch with Lt. Neal and his best friend Lt Lindsay.

Lt. Robert "Bob" Lindsey could always make him laugh and his clownish behavior towards his friends was one of the reasons he was among the most popular men in the unit.

The other reason was his fearlessness in battle.

During the Civil War the Union Army handed out Medals of Honor for acts of unbelievable courage and self sacrifice while under enemy fire.

The Confederate Army had a similar award they called The Role of Honor.

These awards were only given after two battles: Murfreesboro and Chickamauga.

Lt. Bob Lindsay had won awards during both battles as the regimental flag bearer and his bravery and courage under fire had astonished the combatants on both sides of the battlefield.

His attitude, as well as that of the other members of Company H, had changed since their last engagement at Utoy Creek.

They were all disheartened and anticipating the worst, but they dug into their new positions before and during lunch.

The two-day battle of Jonesboro, which occurred on the last day of August and the first day of September, annihilated the Orphan Brigade.

Johnny Green, a member of Co. B of the 9th Kentucky Infantry of this brigade, said the following

"We cut & piled some logs & dug for dear life. The yanks began to shell us but we could not stop... There was a good-sized tree about six feet in our rear, which was cut down by these cannon balls. One shell hit that tree & exploded, killing one man & wounding several. Another shell hit the stump & rolled into the ditch we were digging. The fuse was sizzling, [and] in the next instant it would burst in our midst. Walker Nash had just returned from the rear where he had gone for water, [and] he had a bucket of water in his hand. He saw the danger & dashed the water on the shell extirguishing the fuse & thus no doubt saved the lives of several of our men."

It was during the Battle of Jonesboro that Lt. Young nearly perished. He received a horrid wound through his body while attempting to help Lt. Neal, who had suffered an extreme head wound. Lt. Young was wounded as he leaned over to help Lt. Neal.

Union soldiers from 10th Michigan captured the Battle flag of the Sixth Regiment, Kentucky First Infantry Brigade.

Lt. Young wondered how Bob Lindsey was faring until he was loaded into an ambulance.

Young wrote of his experience nearly a half-century later of that terrible battle.

"Imagine my grief on reaching the ambulance (assisted by comrades) to find my bosom friend (and by many said to be my double), Ensign Robert H. Lindsay of Scott County, in the ambulance, he having received a mortal wound from which he died that night while lying upon the same blanket with myself. The reader can imagine my feelings when the dawn of morning came and I threw back the blanket that covered us and beheld his noble countenance cold in death, with the fixed glare of the eyes that told me that my beloved comrade and friend had passed to the realms of eternal glory. Poor Bob! I tried in vain, while on the way to the field hospital, to extort a parting message, a last farewell to mother and family, but the messenger of death held him in his grasp and refused compliance with this last request of his friend who loved him as a brother."

*And so I will leave you with that thought in mind, dear reader.

In future columns, if the good Lord is willing, we will return to the Kentucky frontier and join our old companions Daniel Boone and Simon Kenton.

But let us have one fleeting glance among our dear, dear Orphans as they are pushed from their position, with their most skilled veterans dead and dying in and around Jonesboro.

I had often wondered why I was unable to find any of the units' battle flags and then I learned of the documentation of members of the second regiment tearing their colors to pieces to prevent their capture.

I instantly envisioned Lt. Robert "Bob" Lindsay standing defiantly, wounded in several places, and shredding the battle colors of his unit with his failing strength as the enemy soldiers swarmed around him.

I imagine similar flags were done likewise as bits and pieces of certain flags of the Kentucky First Infantry Brigade, The Orphan Brigade, have surfaced across the state in recent years.

It should be noted that the Orphan Brigade was only able to muster 240 soldiers fit for duty following the Battle of Jonesboro.

They numbered 5,000 when the war began.

They ended their service to the Confederate Army as a small band of mounted infantry and were among the last units to surrender to Union forces.

Lt. Lot Young survived and returned to Nicholas County, Kentucky where he lived a long and prosperous life. He is buried in the Carlisle Cemetery.

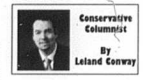
Send Frankfort Some Window Cleaners



Kentucky has long had a reputation for the politics of corruption. Candidates are always campaigning on the promise of "cleaning up Frankfort." Yet despite many words, there have been few deeds. It seems every day I read another story about vote buying or political payoffs.

Yet, in nearly every discussion I've had on this subject people are asking, "How do we stop this? How do we return the power to people's hands?"

To a certain extent, we deserve the government we get. Yet the voters seem to have done their best in trying to scrutinize faulty candidates, usually choosing the contender who preaches the loudest against corruption – only to be disappointed.

Voters do not have a lack of desire for good government.

Theft cases progressing with an arrest

Two criminal investigations are progressing with one arrest made and perhaps as many as seven others pending, according to investigating officers and County Attorney Dawn Letcher.

An investigation into the theft of items from vehicles parked along Kennedy Heights on Aug. 5, and the June thefts of catalytic converters and other items from D&A Exhaust & Fast Lube, have led to the issuance of arrest warrants which are in the process of being served as the Mercury goes to press.

"This was solid investigative work and a good cohesive effort between officers with the Carlisle Police Department and the Nicholas County Sheriff's Office," Letcher said.

Carlisle Police Officer Sgt. Darrell Layne is leading the investigation into the Kennedy Heights thefts and is being assisted by Nicholas County Deputy Sheriff Bennie Buckler.

"Officer Buckler was a great assistance, especially on the night of the Kennedy Heights thefts," Layne said.

Erica Dawn Dale, 27, of Ewing has been arrested in connection with those thefts and charged with five counts of complicity to commit theft by unlawful taking and complicity to commit receipt of stolen credit card.

Investigators say additional arrests are pending and warrants will be served within the next 48 hours in connection with those crimes.

According to Layne, and court documents, several vehicles had items removed from the Kennedy Heights neighborhood, including Catherine and Oriole streets during the evening hours of Aug. 5.

Everything from purses, to cash to radar detectors, were removed," he said. "I estimate the total at about $3,000 right now. We've recovered approximately 80 percent of the stolen items."

Layne said he also received assistance from Nicholas County Jailer Jeff Sidles, who assisted him with gathering information and conducting interviews with inmates at the Montgomery County Jail.

Kentucky Fish and Wildlife Officer William Allen Easterwine also assisted with portions of various interviews conducted in relation to the investigation, according to Layne.

Buckler and Carlisle Police Offices Michael Kiskaden and Mark Snedegar are also working together on the D&A thefts.

According to Officer Kiskaden and Deputy Buckler, there are four suspects believed to have been involved with the theft of the catalytic converters.

"Two warrants have been issued and arrests are pending," Kiskaden and Buckler said.

Catalytic converter theft investigations intensify

As Nicholas County lawmen close in on those responsible for the thefts of area catalytic converts, state law enforcement officers are doing likewise in neighboring counties.

The Kentucky State Police is currently investigating a series of thefts in the Pendleton, Bracken, and Robertson counties involving catalytic converters.

The perpetrators are obtaining access to vehicles when parked on streets, parking lots, and in the victim's driveways. The thefts are occurring in the evenings and at night where access is obtained to the converters from underneath the vehicles. The perpetrators typically use pipe cutters to cut off each end and immediately depart the scene. According to the current incidents, the vehicles tend to be Toyota and Dodge Pickups along with Toyota Sedans.

Nicholas County Sheriff Dick Garrett and Carlisle Chief of Police William Denton continue to investigate the recent thefts of catalytic converters.

Garrett previously said he believed the thieves were taking the stolen catalytic converters to area drug dealers and trading them for illegal drugs.

"I don't think these thefts are being carried out by individuals who are trying to get money to buy food," he said. "I think its strictly drugs."

Nicholas County Deputy Sheriff Benny Buckler said the investigation into the thefts that he is investigating along with Sheriff Garrett continues and information is leading to a specific direction.

"We do have suspects at this time," Buckler said. "Our investigation is continuing and progressing."

Chief Denton said he is naming no suspects in the city investigations, but those investigations also continue.

According to State Police Post 6 Captain Keith Craycraft, any vehicle left outside can be pray to this type of theft as these converters are subsequently sold at recycling businesses. Captain Craycraft added that the Kentucky House Bill 106 requires junkyards and other purchasers of diverse metals to keep records of transactions, and to report the the transactions to law enforcement. Part of the investigational methods includes establishing relationships with these businesses to aid in identifying stolen items and assist in matching them with the original vehicles.

Denton and Garrett say they are sharing information with other area lawmen, including KSP and lawmen in Robertson and Mason Counties.

Captain Craycraft added that the best form to curtail repeated incidents is for citizens to get involved in the activities in their neighborhoods, as it is the best way to identify suspicious vehicles. Other preventative measures include security lights outside residences and whenever possible, to park vehicles in garages.

If you have any information reference these incidents, please contact Kentucky State Police Post 6 at 859-428-1212 the Carlisle Police Department at 289-3710 or the Nicholas County Sheriff's Office at 289-3740.

Pamela Faye Halleran
1962-2008

Pamela Faye Halleran, 46, of Lexington, died Sunday August 3, 2008.

She was born in Maysville, KY, March 15, 1962 to the late Patsy Fryman and Kendall Mitchell.

She is survived by her daughters, Janet, Lee Wigginton (Patrick)and Kayla Halleran; son, Alex Halleran, all of Lexington; sisters, Jeanie Sutton (Greg) of Ewing, and Darlen Back (Thomas) of Richmond, VA; nephews, Brandon Vise and Collin Sutton of Ewing; aunts, Nona Dillon and JoAnn Fryman; and uncle, Woodie Fryman.

She was preceded in death by her mother, Patsy Mitchell and her uncle, Cecil Fryman.

She lived her life to the fullest despite being confined to a wheelchair due to her chronic illness. Along with her beloved sister, Jeanie, nephew, Colin and her youngest children, Kayla and Alex, man camping trips and road trips were planned and enjoyed. She was fortunate enough to get to see her first granddaughter, Aubrey Layne Wigginton, who was born on Mother's Day of this year. Pam was an angel on earth who loved and inspired everyone she met. Although she will be deeply missed by her immediate family and by her extended family at Pine Meadows Healthcare in Lexington, where she worked for many years, we are comforted in knowing that she is with her mother, who passed away in 1984. Pam spoke of her mother often and we know that she is standing tall with her and they are protecting those they left behind in the form of guardian angels

Funeral services were held Thursday, August 7, 2008 at Price Bros. Funeral Home with Rev. Jerry Bolling officiating. Burial followed in Elizaville Cemetery.
