Bluegrass Beacon

Prevailing on taxpayers a labor of love for this Guy

By Jim Waters

During Gov. Steve Beshear's first round of the Frankfort Follies, legislators basically ignored him.

So he's been traveling the state trying to ensure that he becomes more relevant before the 2009 General Assembly convenes.

The problem: He sounds more and more like his one-term predecessor, Ernie Fletcher. The former governor made similar hops throughout the state during his bid for re-election while sounding a refrain similar to Beshear's: "State government needs more of your hard-earned dollars. We in Frankfort know how to spend your money better than you do."

What if just one time a Kentucky governor said: "Folks, we don't have a revenue problem. Rather, quite honestly, we have to get control of our spending." Why, paramedics would have to rush to town halls to treat victims of ensuing heart attacks and strokes.

Instead, this governor's more interested in raising taxes and expanding gambling – safe projects that won't anger his political base.

"We need to continue looking for more revenue," Beshear said several times during a recent town hall meeting in Bowling Green, reported the Daily News. He uttered not one word about spending cuts.

So, I offer a way Beshear could get his hands on millions without raising taxes or expanding gambling – sorry – substitutes for real economic development. Here it is: Lead an effort to lower construction costs on public projects by eliminating prevailing-wage requirements.

This isn't a new idea. For years, budget officials, economic experts and even public-school administrators have pounded away at Kentucky's prevailing-wage formula. This antiquated policy results in construction workers on public projects being paid a lot more money at taxpayers' expense than they would doing the same job on a private project.

• The state Budget Office in 2006 projected that prevailing-wage rates on new schools, university buildings and regional technology centers alone are 18 percent to 30 percent more than the current average for the same type of labor on non-public projects.

• A recent report by Paul Kersey, Bluegrass Institute adjunct scholar and national labor expert, showed that "depending on the community, Kentucky's prevailing wages were on average anywhere from 28 (percent) to 33 percent higher than they could be (by the Bureau of Labor Statistics)."

• The state budget office projected prevailing-wage requirements would drive up the cost of 21 primarily university-building projects by $39 million alone, including $20 million for the new University of Kentucky hospital.

Most amounts were lower than that, but some represented a huge chunk of labor costs. For example, the cost of labor to renovate Northern Kentucky University's Old Science Building is 21-percent higher because of prevailing wage. The project would cost only $12.1 million without prevailing-wage requirements. With it, taxpayers get hit for $15 million.

• The state Budget Office also reported that prevailing-wage mandates are driving up labor costs on public projects by more than 20 percent in 42 Kentucky counties and by at least 17 percent in 87 of the commonwealth's 120 counties.

Now, Beshear avoids this topic like kids duck spinach, and for the same reason. It's "green," as in cash. You see, much of his support comes from labor unions, and prevailing-wage rules serve the unions.

But the union numbers have shrunk. Only 25 percent of non-residential construction workers are now unionized, yet prevailing-wage rates equal union labor rates in more than 60 percent of Kentucky's communities.

Labor bosses don't like my idea. But I remind the governor: You were elected to serve all the people, not just a shrinking minority — no matter how much its members pump into your political campaigns.

If Beshear is serious about finding new revenue, my idea isn't new, but it serves all taxpayers. And it won't cost a single dime.

from the Chippewa, Wyandotte, Delaware and Shawnee tribes. Captain William Caldwell commanded the Native American force in addition to 40 Canadian Rangers.

The Battle was brief, as the Kentucky force attacked the larger force with disastrous results.

"I fired three times and was priming for my fourth shot when word of the retreat came," said Jacob Stevens, a participant of the battle when interviewed by Rev. John Shane. "I turned get my horse but it was gone."

Experts say the battle lasted only 10 to 15 minutes with Native American forces rushing the Kentuckians after the first volley.

The Kentuckians were overwhelmed and retreated south from the battle toward the Licking River where many were killed trying to escape.

Israel Boone was killed as the retreat began and died in his father's arms as the battle raged around them.

Many of the finest militia soldiers and officers were also killed in the battle, including Todd, Trigg and at least 65 others, although the total number of killed is still a point of argument among historians.

Eight soldiers, including two officers: John Beasley and John McMurty were taken prisoners by Native Americans and survived.

Other prisoners were far less fortunate.

"We are led to believe that none were captured," wrote militia soldier Andrew Steele, a survivor of the battle, in a letter to the Governor of Virginia he penned shortly after the battle. Steele's reasoning for this is due to the fact that he was among the recovery force led by Benjamin Logan that marched to the battlefield five days after the battle was fought. "There were a number found tied and butchered," Steele's letter states.

"They were all stripped naked and mangled in such a manner that it was hard to tell one from another," Levi Todd, an officer who participated in the battle and the brother of commander John Todd. wrote of the affair.

"I can't imagine what they found, Paul Tierney, Director of programs for the park told hundred who joined him for a tour of the battlefield when the tour reached the mass burial site inside the park. Tierney called those buried martyars, and the monument erected over the site reflects the same belief.

Tierney joined Dr. Adrian Mandzy earlier this year for an archaeological study of the park in which new information regarding the battle was found.

Mandzy lectured in the museum over the weekend describing the artifacts that the team found.

Among the artifacts discovered were ten bullets, eight of which are believed to have been fired during the battle and two of which are believed to have been dropped during the battle.

"The area of battle was bigger than what was previously though," Mandzy said of his research. "The whole park was part of the battle."

City officials discuss teen vandalism, consider curfew

By Charles Mattox

"One bad apple can spoil a whole batch."

That's an old saying that some say holds true for groups of young adults, and until local teens start "policing their own" and "weeding out the bad ones" they may find they have no place to congregate during the late afternoon and evening hours within Carlisle city limits without being ticketed by police.

City officials briefly mentioned imposing a curfew during the Aug. 11 Carlisle City Council meeting and various actions they could take to curtail the recent acts of vandalism and destruction allegedly being caused by those who frequent popular late-night, teen hang outs around Carlisle.

"We've been having some parking problems and we have been writing some tickets," Mayor Ronnie Clark said at the beginning of the discussion.

"I don't have a problem with the parking, because we don't have a lot to offer our teenagers, but when they start vandalizing property and tearing things up it makes it rough on everyone," said Councilman Tommy Crawford. "A 'little common sense would go a long way."

Clark and other council members spoke about broken bottles and damaged property at the Nicholas County School campus believed to be caused by teens and young adults parking nearby.

"Well, a lot of parents just open the door and let the kids go," Clark said of teens who roam the streets during late hours with no adult guidance.

"It's a sad testimony when you have teens or even those as young as 10, 11 and 12-year-olds, out walking the streets at 3 a.m. in the morning," Crawford added. Crawford is an avid walker and stated that he occasionally takes walks around Carlisle during those hours.

"You'd be amazed what you see," he said as he shook his head.

Discussion, led by Clark, also focused on the alleged activities of young and young adults who have been hiding near the ballpark on Carlisle's East End and hurling tomatoes at passing vehicles during the late night hours.

"That's a hazardous situation," Crawford said.

"I believe it's being caused by older kids that wouldn't be affected by a curfew," Clark added and expressed concerns about the dilemma when telling council members that it was his understanding that juveniles who were detained at night had to be in the custody of a city police officer until a parent or legal guardian arrived at the Carlisle Police Department to take custody of them.

Clark said when that happened it basically removed the officer from being able to patrol the city, and effectively reduced the force by one officer.

Councilman Billy MacGaunce has expressed concerns in recent meetings about neglect and abuse of the East End ballpark. He added to those concerns during the Aug. 11 meeting, citing the recent shooting out of a night-light.

Council members took no specific action regarding the problem during the meeting but said they would monitor future acts of vandalism and destruction and react, accordingly.
