Steve's Report

On December 1st, a chapter in the book of my life came to a close: I am now officially retired from the Army.

I am proud of my 25 years of military service and tend to tell just about everybody I meet that I am a retired Command Sergeant Major. But even though I had a very successful military career, it doesn't really define who I am. The other aspects of my life were always more important to me than my role as a soldier. I was more concerned with trying to please God as a Christian, with trying to be the kind of husband Cindy deserves, and with being a good father to our four children.

Having multiple roles was not a new concept. Before I joined the Army, in the mornings I worked towards a management position at Noble Roman's Pizza and in the afternoons as a customer service manager at a grocery store – attending college somewhere between the two.

And then one morning, a little voice in my heart said, "You need to prepare yourself to get married." I bolted out of bed in a panic. Not only was I clueless about who I was supposed to marry, I had no idea how a poor college student was supposed to support a family.

My initial response was to ask God. "Just tell me what you want me to be, Lord, and I'll do it. Doctor? Carpenter? Farmer? Just tell me what to do and I'll do it." After several weeks, I finally received my answer. He told me: "It doesn't matter what you do." I was initially disappointed by the lack of a clear direction, but God followed it up with a tremendous promise: "No matter what you choose to do in life, if you remain faithful and true, you will always have a roof over your head, clothing on your back, and food on your table."

About that time, my brother tried to convince me to join the Army, but I was reluctant. Of all my options, it was clearly at the bottom of the list. I told the Lord, "If you want me to join, it's going to take some miraculous sign to convince me." A couple of days later, I was on my way to see what the recruiter could offer me, when my car's engine blew - right in front of the recruiter's office. The repairs cost me everything I had saved for college, and then some. "Thanks, Lord," I grumbled, "An angel or a voice from heaven would have worked, too, you know. You didn't have to wipe out my entire savings to get me to listen."

Joining the Army was the best thing that could have happened to me, though. Time and time again, I was put in situations beyond my control where I had to trust in God. There is nothing as unsettling and stressful as packing up everything you own and moving across country – or to a foreign land – with no idea where you are going to live when you get there. But God never failed us – and after years of practice, we eventually learned that when God was at the helm, things always turned out better than when we tried to do it on our own.

The Army was good for me personally, as well, by forcing me to grow. At first, I felt like a non-swimmer thrown into the deep end of the pool and it was all I could do to keep my head above water. After a while I realized, "Hey! I can do this!" Instead of drowning, I discovered I was actually doing a pretty good job. But then, as soon as I started feeling confident in my abilities, I'd either move or get promoted and find myself in an entirely new situation, in over my head once again. I still have my limitations and plenty of room for growth, but when I look back at where I once was – there is no comparison.

So, yes, I will miss the Army – the challenges, the growth, the adventures, the places we have lived, and especially the bond known only to soldiers who place their safety in each other's hands.

But like I said, the Army was only one aspect of my life. Throughout my career, I was always planning for "someday," when I would no longer be called away from home and family. So it is also a joy to finally see those plans finally become a reality.

Still, the Army is a big part of the man I have become, and I will always be thankful for the opportunity I had to serve.

Army Strong!

THANK YOU!

I wanted to say thank you to everyone for there support in the Carlisle City Council election. I will do my part as a council member, by continuing to work hard for change to come to our beautiful city.

In these hard times that we face, with the declining economy, we as a council need to use your tax dollars in the best way we can. We can by tightening up, and cutting all unnecessary spending out.

I know in my heart that everytime I represent you in a meeting; I am trying to get things accomplished for the improvement of the city as a whole.

Please feel free to contact me for any questions and concerns you may have, and I look forward to the pleasure of continuing to serve you.

Thank You,
Betty Jo Booth

…eberry Cobbler

Sweet And Juicy

… blueberries in the freezer, you can use them to brighten so many meals, snacks and desserts.

(NAPSA)-Blueberry Cobbler bubbling in the oven warms the house with a cozy aroma. And now, with a recipe featuring frozen blueberries, you can turn out this classic dessert whenever you like. Frozen blueberries are available year-round and they're ready to use. Just measure them-still frozen-and add to your recipe. With a stash of blueberries in the freezer, you can use these quick ideas:

• Make instant frozen yogurt: in a food processor, whirl 2 cups frozen blueberries with one cup yogurt.

•• Make pancake topping: stir frozen blueberries into real maple … heat until warm.

• Make … dessert toppin… cup blueber… and 2 tablespoons … flavored liqueur, stir in 1 cup frozen blueberries; heat through. Blueberries-frozen or fresh-combine the best that nature has to offer: good nutrients and luscious flavor. A whole cup of blueberries has just 80 calories and provides fiber, vitamin C and manganese our bodies need. For more nutrition information and great recipes, visit www.blueberrycouncil.org.
