COBWOY CHURCH

Bringing in the sheep has taken on new meaning at the new St. Paul's Rectory in Bourbon County.

Since late November, Deane Waldrop has been in the center stage in the auction ring as pastor of the Blue Grass Cowboy Church.

Among the first of its kind in Kentucky, Blue Grass is one of 46 churches affiliated with the Cowboy Church Network of North America.

Founded in North Carolina, the churches serve modern-day cowboys occupied by horse show events and trail riding on weekends.

Having a place of worship that catered to people roaming in saddles on Sunday instead of pews only during the horse season.

Waldrop and his wife Donna were members of one of the non-traditional churches in the Ashville, North Carolina area when she was offered a promotion by AT&T.

Waldrop is encouraged by the fact that "at least one" of the first people was to find a place of worship that catered to people roaming in saddles on Sunday.

person has accepted Christ every season group. Waldrop says his church is non-denominational, but those who have not accepted the principles, and all are welcome regardless of their ethnicity or race.

He stresses the church is here to offer an alternative to traditional services and to assist members from other churches.

Members of other churches are encouraged to become a "partner" at the cowboy church while continuing to tithes at their home church.

"Anybody who can stand my Southern-fried English is welcome," he says.

Other than the requirement of coming up with $800 per month for rent, there have been few problems with having services at the stockyards, according to the Waldrops.

And that problem will be resolved in March when the Bourbon County Fairgrounds in near the new church home.

"Best of all, it's rent-free," said the smiling pastor.

There's plenty of room for the church to host shows and competitions, and even a playground outside for the kids.

Dogs also find a home at the first couple of hours and then did for the first time.

Helping to Keep Kentucky Families Warm This Winter

Last week was one of the coldest we've experienced this winter. The temperatures were in the 20s and 30s.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor, I read last week's paper and there were just a few things that I noticed.

No where in that letter does it mention that the Brandon and Clayton were on that public highway because they had just committed a crime.

Brandon has a daughter. Was it her fault, I don't think so. And what if she had been outside to see what was going on.
