Secret ballots become an open target for Chandler

Bluegrass Beacon
By Jim Waters

If U.S. Rep. Ben Chandler got his way, my senior class at Wabash High School would never have elected me its president.

Chandler wants to take away the rights of employees to cast secret ballots when voting on whether to allow labor unions in their workplace.

Currently, if a majority of workers sign a card in favor of an election, one is held by secret ballot. However, just because workers sign a card supporting an election doesn't necessarily indicate union support. Often, employees sign the card allowing the election, but then vote "no" to a union on their secret ballot.

The difference is: the card signing happens in public, but the actual vote – as it should – remains private.

In fact, can you think of anything more unfair and un-American than taking away the right to vote by secret ballot?

This process served me well. In the election for class president, I ran against a cheerleader – one of the most beautiful girls in school. Lucky for me, no one back then thought of denying voters the right to a secret ballot. She would have scanned the voters to see which guys didn't vote for her, thus eliminating them from the dating pool. I would have lost most of the "guy" votes.

Chandler, who receives tons of union support, apparently is returning the favor by endorsing desperate legislative ploys by anxious labor groups who have seen their numbers — and dues-generated bank accounts — shrink. One can assume that a decline in their mostly negative influence on the political process would soon follow. I'm still waiting on that to happen.

I'm also still waiting for Chandler's answer as to why he voted for the ill-advised "card-check" legislation during the recent session of Congress. His answer – like the proper way to vote – remains a secret.

Someone asked him to explain his vote in front of a room full of civic leaders at Commerce Lexington's August "public affairs" meeting at Keeneland Race Course. My trusty Microsoft "word count" shows Chandler gave a 522-word, rambling response but never answered the question. He didn't address the legislation. He didn't even mention it in his response, which can be seen at: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QCO8yApS_BQ

It's a wacky position to suggest voters should decide on union membership in public, where everyone can see their preference. In fact, I'm not sure which is more bizarre – that position or the fact union bosses argue with a straight face that taking away secret ballots reduces hostility toward – and intimidation of – workers. Huh?

The Web site for an organization calling itself "American Rights at Work" claims that, denying workers a secret ballot represents "a more fair and democratic method for men and women to join unions."

They want you to believe that a secret ballot allows employers the opportunity to harass workers into voting against unions. The claim is often made but rarely substantiated.

In fact, credible research refutes this convoluted logic.

Labor expert James Sherk of the Heritage Foundation's Center for Data Analysis reported that of the 2,115 private-ballot union certification elections supervised by the National Labor Relations Board in 2005, unions filed objections alleging improper employer conduct – threatening, intimidating or firing workers – in only 137. The government upheld only 10 of these grievances.

According to Sherk, unions win 61 percent of all organizing elections — not exactly strong evidence employers tilt the playing field against organizers.

On the other hand, even most union workers oppose forcing people to vote publicly. A poll by Zogby International found that 78 percent of union workers believe the current system is fair. They "favor, keeping the current system over replacing it with one that provides less privacy," Sherk wrote.

Chandler should join their ranks.

Damage Control
By J.A Jance

The author of J.A Jance hit the New York Times best selling author of the J.P. Beaumont series, the Joanna Brady series, the Ali Reynolds series and the three stand-alone thrillers. Born in South Dakota and brought up in Bisbee, Ariz., she lives with her husband in Seattle, Wash. and Tucson, Ariz.

On a beautiful sunny day in the Coronado National Monument, an elderly couple's car goes off the side of a mountain and into oblivion. The terrain is so rocky that a helicopter must be flown in to retrieve the bodies, and to make matters worse, a thunderstorm is looming on the horizon. Hours later and miles away, the subsiding rain reveals gruesome evidence; two trash bags containing human remains.

Another day for Joanna Brady in Cochise County. Back at home with a newborn baby, a teenage daughter, a writer husband and a difficult mother to deal with. Joanna finds that she has much more to deal with, with a handicapped woman who had wandered away from a care facility.

Meanwhile, a note is found in the glove compartment of the car lying twisted down the mountainside stating that the couple intended to take their lives. The autopsy report comes back with suspicious findings and when the deceased's two daughters show up feuding over the inheritance, which Sheriff Brady comes to realize that there is more to the elderly couples death instead of just a suicide. She will stop at nothing to find out what happened to them no matter what it takes."

This novel will keep you guessing on what really happened to the elderly couple and who is involved in the crime. If you like novels of suspense you will love this one. With the turning of each page you will be sitting at the edge of your seat and anticipating what happened or who it may be.

Until next time keep reading and enjoy the novel.
