Heaven Is A Lot Like Kentucky

THE KENTUCKY DIE-HARDS

September 17, 1778

Captain Benjamin Logan, 36, gathered the three-dozen or so inhabitants around him in the early part of the day...

many large rocks toward the entrance of the tunnel at the river until one of the elderly ladies to the fort had begged him to stop because the Shawnee would really get mad if he didn't.

He delivered some extremely grim news to his friends and neighbors after being briefed by one of his primary scouts, William Patton.

"For Boonesborough has fallen to the Shawnee," he said, as the men and women nearly collapsed from the devastating news.

"It was horrible, the screaming that I heard as something unlike I'd ever heard before. Like a wounded bear crying out before it is killed by wolves."

RULING

Michael laws stated that the Commonwealth agreed to remain silent as to its position concerning whether (Wells) sentence should be probated in any form, according to the Response To Defendants Motion or Shock Probation filed July 10. In that motion Wright further outlined why the Commonwealth should not grant probation to the minor victim involved in the case oppose the defendant being granted shock probation.

He was having Captain Daniel Boone detained inside Fort Boonesborough and Boone would soon face a military tribunal and court martial for several alleged military crimes, including: Surrendering the salt markets at Eliza Lick; Conspiring with British Commander Hamilton at Detroit during his own surrender and Treason.

Neither Loggan, nor Loggan, had any way of knowing it, but Montgomery was already dead, killed by Shawnee warriors across the Ohio River.
