Reflecting on his stay in Carlisle

Tomorrow, Tuesday, will be time for me to leave. After a 15 hour long trip, which I am not looking forward to, I will be in France, in Toulouse, with my dad, mom brother, and grandpa. And I cannot but anticipate the joy it will be to my heart to see them again, to feel the motherland under my feet. But right now, this is not what I want to think of. Because this has not been my life these past 10 months. Right now, I am looking back, and with great nostalgia, I realize how blessed I have been to and up in this community. When I joined the Rotary exchange program, I was hoping to live in a big city, maybe New York or San Francisco, because that was America as I knew it, because I was afraid of facing the unknown of a little town, with its load of gossip and daily life-changing events. I was afraid of losing my bearings, and spending a lonely year, being every night to pack "boxes." And quite frankly, I have been surprised. It feels like this place has been right for me. Through the year, I have changed, grown and discovered so many things. A new culture, a new view on the world, a new way of living, and most of all, a new way of being myself.
