

Heaven Is A Lot Like Kentucky

ESCAPING FROM THE KENTUCKY SCOUTS

1768, at Robert Scioneaux's partially constructed cabin, near the present border of Nicholas and Bourbon County.

Michael Cassidy, who the Kentucky scouts called 'Michael Cassidy,' had wanted to kill him outright, but had been talked out of it by the leaders of the white scouts.

And, had it not been for the exceptional kindness of the white scouts, Captain Daniel Boone, who ran a tavern at Limestone (Mayville) and who traded generously for whiskey among the scouts on their word...

Most of the white rangers who had taken their captive were either drunk or extremely hung over.

Moorefield Homemakers

The Moorefield Homemaker call was answered with "How I Celebrate Memorial Day" Pinnies for Friendship were handed out...

Verdaland Lyons gave the devotional entitled "Tough Love." The month's Lesson was "make it Safe & Keep it Safe" Margie Wilson read the pledge to the flag and read the Homemaker creed.

the trip from Limestone, to George Stockton's Station, Michael Cassidy's Station, Ready Money Jack's Trading Post, Miller's Station and finally, Robert Scioneaux's Station, as the group of scouts moved southwestward back toward the Strouds Station settlements.

Blue Jacket and his companions had taken 8 or ten horses. The blow had nearly torn his head from his shoulders, and had struck him so hard it actually knocked six of his silver earrings out of one ear.

When Stephen Boyle's turn came, he couldn't stay awake and before anyone knew it, Blue Jacket was partially undressed and was hopping out the door.

Mrs. Scioneaux gave the alarm as it was just being dawn and Scioneaux's dogs were put on the men made up the scout party trail.
