Avoid Firewood Insects

This is the time of year when many people begin cutting and stacking up on firewood to heat their homes this winter. Along with this firewood come insects that enter the home when the wood is carried in to burn. To avoid the insects from getting into the house here are a few suggestions.

Store the firewood outdoors and only bring in what you plan to burn in a few hours. This will lessen the time that insects will have to get loose in your house. Outside, store your wood away from the house and off the ground. By doing this you can prevent termites and ants from entering and harming your home. Finally, burn your older wood first, because it will have the largest number of insect infestations.
