"Your eyes will only see what your mind believes"

by Joshua E. Harper

If you open your mind and your uncompromising thoughts to no end and see no doors, then you open a journey in life that is a destiny to greatness and enlightenment.

By believing the unbelievable, you will see the un-seeable, and know of the un-knowable.

To be one with nature is like being one with the trees, the wind, the water in the creeks, and the animals that savage through it. Like being one with a falling leaf, Is to know that it has lasted long enough. To see the leaf as it falls is like seeing more than just a dead leaf covering the ground, its like seeing the seasons pass and the strength of that leaf in its unbearable fall to glory, and it will rise again as it did in its earlier days. Its endurance and strength is unconditional to what it surpasses.

The wind is always there. It can't be harmed, it can't be stopped, and it can't be misguided. It's like if you punch through the wind, it just moves around you and goes its original way. Being like the wind is like living life with real 'absoluteness', to be on your path and to never be pushed from it. The wind rolls over the hills, around the mountains, through the trees, and over the creeks. It accepts its obstacles and defeats them. As you would walk through a crowd, without stumble, without conflict, and without worry. Moving with what's around you is like being the wind, without nervousness, and still consistent.

The water in the creeks move without concern, they go their way. They move through the rocks while keeping their intentions. Water is heavy, it is consuming, and it gives life. To be water is to move with ruthless power and to maintain your position. To push away your enemies, and to grasp your friends. As water can never be separated from itself, you must always control yourself. Water is full; there are no empty spots, no holes. To be as full as water, is to move fluidly but to continue with harmony, to be still but always moving as one.

The fire burns with an overwhelming behavior, it is strong but yet tired. Fire can burn with an intense aggression, and it can die like a crushed fish. As the fish is weak and has no water it can die, as the fire is sensitive and without waste it can disappear. To say moving like fire is intense, and it builds on itself. It is vigorous and quick. It can light the torch of a nervous man, but also burn the fields of harvested land.

It can pillage or protect.

The earth is large and knows of itself, it connects all together as one each part. Earth is overbearing but correct. It gives us mountains and plains to build our crops, but controls our soil. Its like a belief, it gives us life and reason to care, but to believe in its truth and ability, guides us to wisdom.

"A lifetime of breath, A lifetime of site, is only a temporary taste to earth."
